CASE OF ALLEGED FRAUD. - Baldwin vs. Fore-man Brothers-The case of Frederick M. Baldtime since, resulting in a verdict of $2.700 for the plaintiff, as reported at the time in the PRESS AND TRIBUNE. A new trial was subscquently granted.

The evidence of the plaintiff has not been concluded, and the defendants have not yet opened their line of defence; but from the stateopened their line of defence; but from the state-ments made so far, it seems that a Mr. Baldwin, living in Oswego, Kendall county, obtained, in exchange for his farm, a house and lot on North La Salle street, in Chicago; which property he traded to Foreman Brothers, wholesale clothing merchants on Lake street, for $7,500 worth of goods, at fifteen per cent. above New York cost, consisting principally of clothing. This cloth-ing was mostly selected by a Mr. Tripp, of the firm of Tripp, Hale & Co., who was to get a por-tion of it.

Hank Suspension.

The City Bank of Racine suspended payment on Monday morning. The Racine Journal says bill-holders need not feel uneasy as they are amply secured.

Procures or Civilization.—Within the wages of shame and for the most infamous purposes, has been opened on State street, below Twelfth. It is intended in palatial splendor to vie with the most gorgeous dens of New York. It remains to be seen if our police will have any more respect for rosewood and velvet tapestry than for the more common furnishings. We trust they have not.

It is alleged, by the plaintiff, that the goods, to that agreed upon, were at exorbitant prises, and many of them of different kidns from those selected; for all which this action is now brought to recover damages. The plaintiffs will probably conclude to-day, and the defence open their case. For plaintiffs, Farwell & Smith; for defendant, MeAllister and Van Buren.

JUDGE BREESE ON THE JUNEAUS CASE.—The dissenting opinion of Judge Breese, of the Supreme Court, in the case of Henry Jumperts, in which he differs strongly from his brethren on the Bench, who have sent back the case for a new trial, has just been filed. ATH OF SENATOR BRO

DIATH OF SENATOR BRODERICE,

The mind of the wounded man was wandering after the infliction of the fatal shot, and at times he was not himself. The effect of the chioroform given to him deadened the exerutiating agony by affecting his nervous system, which had been strong to the greatest tension by the three days of harrassing anxiety proceding the duel. Hefore the fight he expressed his irrindetermination not to shoot at Terry above the hips, as he did not consider he had say quarred with aim, and after he was shot his wandering mind called that up, as also the impression of the conviction that he was to be hunted by the hingry crew who thirsted for his office, until he should be killed. He talked of the defeat in his State of the great principles of the serted by the people he had taken the field for and now the peculiar class of politicians who had joined against him would be encouraged to had principle and the felt he was to be silenced, and he is now silenced forever. forever. to let a member of a lat against petition and entreaty, and William Bennett dangled at a rope's end in the prezence of some thousands of spectators who took in a great moral lesson. This was the first and last duel ever fought on the soil of Illinois. And when the next one takes place, if there ever be another, let us trust that he may come before an equally honest jury, an equally upright Executive, and that he may meet the common assessin's doom.

What is the case before us? Two public moved glowly in that breathless suspense. His liver are an ebbed slowly away, and at twenty minutes past 9 o'clock yesterday morning the "golden bowl was broken." The soul of one of earth's honored sens had been called by the hand who gave it, and the form which it had once animated with the fires of hope and courage and manly ambition was left upon the couch a lump of cold, insensible clay—Broderick was dead.

Hearmound occasionally give utterance to incoherent appreciators, and deprecate the interfersence caused by the police on the day of the first meeting. His mind was evidently harrassed with the idea that he had prematurely fallen a victum to unrelenting political animosities, and that standing in the path of his adversaries, he had been doomed to destruction. Without believing that there was hay formal conspiracy to kill him, no man could hape so provoked them as he has done in the last canvass, without subjecting himself to their most deadly hostility. It appeared to be a common belief among those who recognize the code, that he had to fight them all. Perhaps not in detail, perhaps not one after the other—but when he presented his breast to the pistol of Terry, it would seem that he braved the whole concentrated hate of those who felt aggrieved by his attacks, Few doubted that if has had assented.

There was no concerted signal of grief, no set phrase or form of sorrow; but a gloom rested like a pall upon the whole city; it was fait rather than uttered. There was no parade of mourning; no proud estentation of hollow-

THE PUNERAL. out from the Union Hotel, crossed Kearney street, and up the great svenue through the plata. Room was made by the concourse, and through the alley thus made, the solemn procession moved to the platform, where the coffin, containing all that was mortal of Senstor Broderick, was placed. Then the multitude pressed onward like the surping of ocean waves, and formed themselves into one solid mass of humanity—"a sea of upturned faces" stretching to far beyond hearing of the ceremonies which were to take place. The pall-bearers and chief mourners then assembled (under direction of Mr. Massey, the undertaker) upon the platform, and when all were seated, Col. E. D. Baker arose, and having the coffin, (which was covered with wreaths of flowers) before him, pronounced a funeral oration, which, we renture to say, will remain for many years impressed vividly upon the memories of his auditors. The grey haired man, used as he was to addressing public assemblages, found his emotions on this solemn occasion ready to unman him, during the entire delivery. At times his voice, loud and ringing as it was, balted and faltered, and the trembling of the accents showed how often and how deeply the strong man was moved. Nor were his hearers less acutely penetrated with the momentous and affecting nature of the occasion. Far and sear the assemblage wrought into sympathetic passion by the words and aspect of the gifted orator, vainly endeavored to repress their emotions. Audible sobs arose from hearing breasts, and tears coursed down many a browned and manly face. We are constrained from lack of room, to place the oration on our dist page, where it is given entire. We invited from lack of room, to place the oration on our dist page, where it is given entire. We invited close, when Col. CITIESTS OF CALIFORMA: A Senstor lies dead in our midst! He is wrapped in a bloody shroud, and we, to whom his toils and cares were given, are about to bear him to the place appointed for all the living. It is not fit that such a man should pass to the tomb unheralded; it is not fit that such a death should call forth no rebuke, or he surrounded by with honor.

It is my duty to say that, in my judgment, when at a later period he songht to anticipate the Senatorial election, he committed an error which I think he lived to regret. It would have been a vicination of the true principles of representative government, which no reason, public or private, could justify, and could never have met the permaneut approval of good and wise men. Yet, while I say this over his bier, let me remind you of the temptation to such a rene remind you of the temptation to such an er or—of the plans and the reasons which prompt d it—of the tanny good purposes it was intend d to effect: And if ambition, "the last infirmit ed it—of the junny good purposes it was intended to effect. And if sentition, "the last infirmity of noble sainds," led him for a moment from the better path, let me remind you how nobly he regained it.

It is impossible to speak within the limits of this address of the events of that session of the Senate of the United States; but some things abould not be passed in silence here. The content between himself and the present Senator had been butter and personal. He had trimphed. He had been wonderfully sustained by his friends, and stood confessedly "the first in honor and the first in place." He yielded to an appeal made to his magnanimity by his foe. If he judged unwisely, he has paid the forfeit well. Never in the history of political warfare has any public man been so pursued, never has malignity or exhausted itself.

Follow citizens, the man that lies before you was your Senator. From the moment of his election, his character has been maligned, his motives attacked, his courage impeached, his patriotism assailed. It has been a system tending to one end. And the end is here. What was his crime? Review his history—consider his public acts—weigh his private chraacter—and before the grave encloses him foreyer, judge between him and his enemies.

As a man to be judged in his private relations, who was his superior? It was his boast, and amid the general license of a new country, it was a proud one, that his most scrutinizing enemy could fix no single act of immorality upon him. Temperate, decorous, self-restrained, he dly been one of his most influers. There were unquestional ial supporters. There were unquestionably some things in the appointing power which he could have wished otherwise; but he had every ould be supposed to weigh with a man in his osition. He had beartily maintained the doc-rine of Popular Sovereiguty as set forth in the inclinant Platform, and he never wavered in duct of the man who lies hushed in death be fore you. You read in his history a glorion imitation of the great popular leaders who hav opposed the despotic influences of power in other lands, and in our own. When Joh Hampden died on Chalgrove field, he sealed hi devotion to popular liberty with his blood. The eloquence of Fox found the sources of its in suitation in the local of the propile when the property of the propile when the propile is the propile when t cloquence of For found the sources of its in-spiration in his love of the people. When Sen-ators conspired against Tiberius Gracchas, and the Tribune of the people fell beneath their daggers, it was power total prompted the crime and demanded the sacrifice. Who cm doubt, if your Senator had surrendered his free thought and bent in submission to the rule of the Ad-ministration—who can doubt that, instead of resting on a bloody bier, he would have this day been reposing in the inglorious felicitude of Presidentia sunshine?

Fellow citizens, let no man suppose that the death of the eminent citizen of whom I speak was caused by any other reason than that to which his own words assign it. It has been long foreshadowed—it was predacted by his friends—it was threatened by his enemies—it was the consequence of intense political hatted.

friends—it was threatened by his enemies—it was the consequence of intense political hatred. His death was a political necessity, poorly veiled beneath the guise of a private quarrel. Here, in his own State, among those who witnessed the late canvass, who knew the contending leaders, among those who know the antagonists on the bloody ground—here the public conviction is so thoroughly settled that nothing need be said. Tested by the correspondence itself, there was no cause, in morals, in honor, in taste; by any code, by the custom of any civilized land, there was no cause for blood. there was no cause, in morals, in honor, in taste; by any code, by the custom of any civilized land, there was no cause for blood. Let me repeat the istory—it is as brief as it is fatal. A Judge of the Supreme Court descends into a political convention—it is just, however, to say that the occasion was to return thanks to his friends for an unsuccessful support—in a speech bitter and personal, he stigmatized Semator Broderick and all his friends in words of contemptuous insult. When Mr. Broderick saw that speech, he retorted, saying im substance, that he had heretofore spoken of Judge Terry as an honest man, but he now took it back. When inquired of, he admitted that he had so said, and connected his words with Judge Terry's speech as prompting. So far as Judge Terry personally was concerned, this was the cause of mortal combat; there was no other. In the contest which has just terminated in he State, Mr. Broderick had taken a leading part; he had been engaged in controversies very personal in their nature, because the subjects of public discussion had involved the character and conduct of many public and distinguished men. But Judge Terry was not one of these. Hewas no contestant; his conduct was not in issue; he had been mentioned but once incidentally—in reply to his own attack, and, except as it might be found in his peculiar traits or peculiar fitness, there was no reason to suppose that he could seek any man's blood. When William of Nasaau, the deliverer of Holland, did in the presence of his wife and children, the hand that struck the how was not nerved by pirvate vengeance. When the fourth Henry passed unharmed amid the dangers of the field of lvry, to perish in the streets of his capital by the hand of a funnite, he did not asket to avenge a private price. An exagerated sense of peasonal honor, a weak mind with choleric passons, intense sectional prejudice united with great confidence in the use of arms—these sometimes serve to stimulate the instruments which accomplish the deepest and deadliest purpose man to dear with a spirit as introduced to the principle he held in his hands was irrevisitible. The departments were abstract production and the spirit production of the Administration from a severeign State, having rights which could neither be limited nor leasened by party lines, he was as steadily excluded from all participation in the affairs of the Administration as if he had sat in the French Assembly. Nor was his own course in this crisis marked by violence or passion. It is to his credit, that, while conscious that he stood almost isolated in the Sensie, he preserved a wonderful equanimity and moderation of deportment. No man would have more heartily rejoiced if the Administration had retraced the first false step, and regretted its continuance in the path of wrong.

one and reflective cast to his habits and his thoughts, which marked them to the last hour of his life. He was shays filled with pride, and energy and smbition—his pride was in the manhad more reason. His energy was manifest in the most resolute struggles with porety and obscurity, and his ambition impelled him to seek a foremost place in the great race for honorable power.

Up to the time of his arrival in California his life had been passed amid events incident to such a character. Fearless, self-reinst, open in his enmittee, warm in his friendships, wedded to his opinions, and marching directly to his purpose through and over all opposition, his career was chequered with success and defeat. But ever, in defeat his swergets were strengthened and his character developed. When he reached these shores, his keen observation tangit him at once that he trod a broad field, and that a higher career was before him. The procession having followed the route already rescribed, arrived shortly after 4 o'clock at the Lone Mountain Cemetery. There were gathered a large number of vehicles awaiting Tomb were thrown open, and awaited their new its appoach. The iron doors of the Receiving Tomb were thrown open, and awaited their new occupant. Sorrowful and grief stricken fases were there. Silent and slowly the concourse wended their way towards the last resting place of the dead Senator, and there awaited the arrival of the funeral cortege. Soon it came; not with the glare and sound of military display; not with the tinsel of uniform or the pageaniry of civicer military poup, but slowly, mournfully, and with the aspect of men on whose hearts a blight had falleu, whose alliction could best and only be expressed by the deep eloquence of silence. mournfully they marched towards the mauso-leum. The assemblage made way for the sad procession. The pail bearers, uplifting their precious burthen, came to the doors of the vanil, and resting the coffin upon the sod, awaited the last melancholy rites.

The coffin having been deposited in the vault, and placed by itself in the niche prepared for it, where it will remain until a final resting-place shall have been selected in the grounds of the Cemetery, the concourse dispersed, and leav-ing the body of Senator Broderick to the silence of the tomb, returned to the city. And thus terminated the last act of the melancholy event.

ANOTHER DUEL.

The death of Senator Broderick had scarcely been announced yesterday, when another fatal duel was made public, having taken place, at 7 o'clock in the morning, near San Andres. The facts, as ecomunicisted by telegraph, are as follows: 'A fatal duel was fought at 7 o'clock, near this place, San Andres, between Dr. Peterson Godwyn and Col. Wm. A. Gatewood-weapons rifles, at forty paces. At the first fire Dr. Godwyn fell, mortally wounded, and died in two hours.

It was only because he refused to compromise the truth, and to abandon his solemn pledges, that we are now called apone to mourn his untimely death. Thus has closed a pure, beautiful, and stainless life! Thus has fallen the first great marry to the political principles of the campaign of 1858. INDIAN DIFFICULTIES.

[Correspondence of the St. Louis Espublican.]
The telegraph may have given you a meagre account of the recent Indian outrages on the plains, but I hasten to communicate the details as derived from authentic sources.
Mr. Patterson, from Walmut Creek, brought us the first intelligence, and Mr. Cole, of this county, (who was with the train when attacked,) strived a few hours later, with fuller details. ers the following facts:

Some weeks ago the desperate Camanche
Chiel Buffalo Hump, with some of his braves, appeared among the Klowas, and was observed to be in frequent consultations with them. The Klowas have been dissatisfied and threatening toward the history. Glowas have been dissatisfied and threatening oward the whites during all the summer, and it was supposed that the mission of Buffalo Homp was to stir up their anger to violence. No overt act of hostifity occurred, however, until the 20th nlt., when a squabble took place at Rickman's Ranch between some Klomas and whites, about a horse swap, resulting in a skirmish and the death of an Indian. The other Indians and off warning vengeance, and soon collected war party.

Three day's after (on the 25d of September)

Ranch.

Cole lay all night concealed in the grass, and next morning wandered about until he came up to a camp of Pike's Peakers, from whom he received an escort to a trading post, and from thence proceeded homewards. He passed through here some hours size, on his way to through here some hours since, on his way to his family in Independence.

The Santa Fe mail train that was due here on Tnesday last, has not yet arrived, and no intelligence of its where abouts. It is believed by Mr. Cole and others that it has shared the fate of the out-going train. It is feared that the Indians, knowing it to be about due, proceeded on to intercept and attacked it. From letters received here it is thought that Judge Watts, with his son and son's wife, and Mr. Crenshaw, of Independence, were passengers with this train. It may be that they were well armed and in the neighborhood of one Government troops who are reported tobe on the road, in roops who are reported to be on the road, i ransit from Fort Union to Fort Riley, whic nay be their protection. At least we will hop or the best until we hear th worst.

There were two sets of engineers on board but they all stoutly denied being in in the versict. There were two sets of engineers on board but they all stoutly denied being in any way responsible. A London correspondent of the Philadelphia North American writes:

"The chairman of the Corapany said neither he nor the directors were responsible for the working of the engines. Mr. Scott Russell, though on the bridge best part of the voyage, giving orders, disclaimed all responsibility. His foreman, Dixon, who worked the paddle engines, denied that they were under his charge, and the engineer-in-chief said that they had never been in his charge at all. The other engineers all told the same tale, so that if these men are to be believed on their oath, the Great Eastern made her voyage from Deptford to Portland by the aid of Providence alone, being at the time is charge of nobody. Mr. Campbell said Mr. Scott Russell was in charge of his own engines. Mr. Scott Russell vowed that it was false. He said the engineer-in-chief, Mr. McLellan, was. Mr. McLellan declared Dixon was. Dixon aword he was not. Arnott said it was McLellan, and Patrick said he worked under Arnott. All agreed as to the cause of the accident. Some knew nothing of the syphon tap; others knew of it, but never thought to examine it. Indeed, it was not until after the explosion that the tap on the second facult was the jacket upon the eve of explosion, took this responsibility upon himself—he opened it, and saved the ship from a more disastrous catastrophe than the rewas gross mismangement, a want of system, and the presence no board of a dozen masters,
